ECONOMIC THEORIES AND EMPIRICS: EMERGING ISSUES

Date: 5th December, 2020

The world of economics has witnessed evolution through the phases of mercantilism, physiocracy, classical, Keynesian and neo-classical. Most of the theories studied in the curriculum of economics across the world's universities pertain to these different sets of economic thoughts as these economic theories have shaped the policy making at different periods of time and have determined what the world economy today and how individual's well-being are. The big economic divide between the North and South parts of the world and the rising inter-personal economic disparity that we witness currently have been outcome of economic policies followed in developed and developing countries. How countries and individuals make economic choices and how the choices are constrained by the existing orders, has shaped not only the economic theories but also relevant economic policies. In such backdrop, the current seminar gives platform to those academicians and researchers, who have been working on the related economic theories and empirical evidences, to share their ideas and findings to benefit the larger audience of academicians, researchers, policy makers and college students too. The seminar invites the research papers for presentation (virtual mode) on the following and other related areas:

- Emerging Issues in Sectoral Dimensions of Indian Economy
- Emerging Issues in Poverty, Inequality and Development
- Emerging Issues in International Economics
- Emerging Issues in Labour Economics
- Emerging Issues in Financialization and Development
- Emerging issues in Consumers and Producers' behaviour: Theoretical and Empirical Evidences
